

When I started my journey as a Virtual Administrative Consultant years ago, I still remember that feeling that it was taking an ETERNITY to become successful. I had all the knowledge and skills after 14 years in admin, but I felt utterly alone, clueless on how to talk to potential clients and my mind was scattered with a baby on the way, making less than $2k per month working 3 jobs full and part time while getting my college degree. But I was determined to better our life.

So I stopped doing all the things and I focused on one single thing. CONFIDENCE. I was following the people, posting daily, responding to ALL the "job opps" with 532 other VAs. Downloading literally every freebie I saw which was even more overwhelming. I stopped doing all the things and just started connecting with people building my confidence along the way.

I gained confidence and I gained clients.

Now I do things differently and I want to help others start their own business as a VA to avoid the madness, show up as an expert and create consistent income.
